ANOTHER YEAR FOR C. C. C. CAMPS

By Glen Wright

That he plans to ask the next Congress to provide for the continuation of the Civilian Conservation project for another year was announced by President Roosevelt at Warm Springs, Georgia recently.

The announcement was made after the President had visited C. C. C. Camp Meriwether, where Company 1429 is located, which he complimented highly for its appearance and work accomplished.

There could be no better news for those men now enrolled and who are not successful in finding employment between now and spring, when this second six months' period is over. It is good news also for those other young men on the waiting list who haven't yet had an opportunity of working in the forests—for it is almost certain that some of them will get a chance at enrolling if the work is continued another year.

Commenting editorially regarding the President's plan, "Happy Days," official organ of the C. C. C. states:

"The President's words are indicative of the fact that the C. C. C. is a success. In fact, those of us who have been in close touch with it, know that it has been more of a success than was anticipated. A tremendous amount of needed work has been done, nearly half a million young men have been given jobs when there weren't any other jobs and some 2,000,000 dependents of the men have been afforded financial assistance because of the C. C. C.—the first of President Roosevelt's steps toward economic recovery.

"It was an important wedge driven into the center of the depression, and the President's desire to continue it another year speaks well for the men and the work they have accomplished and for the manner in which they have been directed."

FORD AND HEARST FOR NRA

A short time ago Henry Ford and William Randolph Hearst expressed their views on the President's industrial recovery program, and in emphatic terms. Their statements were significant because they are two of American's largest employers, and in each instance what they had to say was spontaneous. It is a fair inference that each considered it his duty to make his position clear, and each chose a manner calculated to attract the widest attention of he public as well as the many thousands on their respecive pay rolls.

Mr. Ford rarely makes a speech, but over a long-distance telephone hook-up from Dearborn he addressed more than 10,000 of his dealers assembled in 32 cities, as follows: "I think 1934 will be a good year for everybody that works. That is one thing the depression has taught us. The only thing that can pull this country through is work. There is plenty of work to do. We have all got to pitch in and do all the business we can to help the President pull the country out of the hole." A few days previously his Dearborn Independent had said editorially: "Let it be said, and even taken as a prophecy, that the NRA is here to stay. It is at least one of the most human and equitable acts passed for the common good in many years."

Under the title "We Live and Learn—Sometimes," Mr Hearst addressed to all of his newspapers an analysis of the National Industrial Recovery Act and its administration which clearly revealed his appreciation of the purpose of both. "The NRA," he said, "can advance to complete success as industry recovers and unquestionably when industry has eventually recovered, the policies of NRA will not only benefit labor but will benefit industry. They will, in fact, benefit the Nation. They will make the whole community prosperous. The principle of the measure is just. The fundamental effort of NRA should be to build up industry through governmental cooperation with industry and supervision of industry through elimination of the waste and of harmful competition."

Little America

Our Iceberg land, to thee,
Chill realm of mystery,
To thee I sing;
I love thy plains of snow,
Stained by Aurora's glow,
To scarp, and cliff, and floe,
My fancies cling.

Our new possession, thou,
Strange visions haunt me now;
Thy wastes I see.
I see thy spouting whales,
I hear thy roaring gales,
All that the distance veils,
Is clear to me.

Our glistning southern pole,
Though thou ar't not my goal,
I hail thee now;
I love thy stretch of light,
Varied by lingering night;
Each awesome sound and sight,
I love—but how!

Our wee America,
This will I rise to say,
"Bright be thy star!"
Long may our heroes tell,
Of thy alluring spell;
Long may I love thee well—
Well, but—afar!

ANTIQUE AND OVERSIGHT PROPERTIES ARE SOLD

A New York syndicate recently took over the Antique and Oversight mining properties in the Alleghany mining district. The properties are owned by Ray Hawkins and George Hallock of Alleghany and Nevada City.

Work on the property will be carried on by the Sixteen-to-One Extension Gold Mines, Ltd., with offices in New York, Wilmington and Alleghany. George W. Hallock, one of the former owners, is president and superintendent of operations.

Plans call for sinking a shaft from 500 to 1,000 feet to intersect the Tightner or Sixteen-to-One ledge. The building program includes construction of a road from the main highway and bunk and boarding houses. Electric power is available.

Miss Phyllis Andersen, who has been the guest of Miss Jessie Robins for the past week returned to her home in Bloomfield on Saturday.

W. E. Meservey, one of Nevada City's pioneers, is recovering from a severe illness which is good news to his friends.

LONG HOIST INSTALLED AT OLD DELHI MINE

An unusual hoisting apparatus has been completed at the old Delhi mine, near North Columbia, north of Nevada City, making it possible to drop material to the old No. 4 tunnel on the Middle Yuba river, nearly 2,000 feet down the canyon.

The hoist, was an old-time water power affair and has been converted into a gasoline hoist and is now complete with 2, 200 feet of cable.

The Miner's Foundry of Nevada City, installed the hoist and it has one of the longest lifts in the state. The No. 4 tunnel is the main entrance to the mine.

Louis Nonneman and sister of San Francisco, are owners of the property. T. H. Helibron is superintendent of mine operations.

NEW VEIN UNCOVERED ON TIPPETT RANCH

O. H. Hershey, nationally known engineer, believes he has located a hitherto unknown vein running diagonally across the Tippett ranch, near Grass Valley, about three quarters of a mile long. He believes that if the vein carries gold it will become the base of ore for more than 4000 feet through the property.

There are 173 acres in the Tippett ranch under option to the Bullion Gold and Silver Mining Company, which also has taken options on adjacent properties.

A crew have been clearing away brush and trenching to determine a favorable spot to start sinking, and will star operations as soon as machinery and equipment is installed. Francis Upton is president and director.

PHOENIX MINE SINKS WINZE BELOW 200 LEVEL

T. S. Davey is preparing to sink a winze between 200 and 300 feet below the 200 foot level of the Phoenix mine, south of Grass Valley.

The mine is being operated 24 hours a day on a fine ledge of ore that has been traced from the surface on what used to be known as the Riley ranch.

Within the last few months more than 1,000 feet of drifting and raising has been done on the 200 level.

Three pumps are keeping down the water by lifting about 230 gallons per minute.

Recently a group of stock-holders from San Francisco visited the property.

Last week Mrs. Minnie Young filed a petition in the Superior Court of Nevada county, for letters of administration on the estate of her husband, the late Wm. E. Young, and it was accompanied by a petition to set aside the estate to the widow. Heirs are the widow and son and daughters. The estate is valued at about $2,500.

Mrs. Charles Guenther, who has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. C. Epperson and family in Bakersfield the past two weeks, returned home Sunday evening.

Nation Awaits Congress' Action on FDR's Much-Debated Money Policy

WILL Congress get behind the president in carrying out his monetary program? Or will that august body arise and balk the chief executive's plans with respect to the dollar?

The answer, of intense interest to the American public, will be forthcoming when Congress swings into action in January

Opposition to the government's new money policy has smouldered for some time Recently it burst into flame, fanned by the disapproval of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, Alfred E. Smith, and others

To understand the background of this controversy it is necessary to present President Roosevelt's aims and the way he plans to fulfill them

The purposes of his dollar-managing plan as outlined in recent speeches by the president, is to aid the farmer and the business man by raising commodity prices to the level of 1926 giving work to the jobless and making it possible for the nations debtors to rid themselves of their burdens at or near the price level at which they were incurred

To accomplish these ends by the plan adopted by the government involves four steps

(1) The gold value of the dollar is depreciated gradually to a point necessary to bring about a rise in prices This is done by setting arbitrary prices for newly-mined gold above the $20.67 an ounce price set by law. The theory behind this is that if an ounce of gold costs more more dollars will be required to buy it The dollars thus will be cheaper and the purchase of commodities will of necessity require more of these dollars.

(2) When the dollar has been cheapened to the necessary point, the government keeps its lessened value more or less constant by making it redeemable in gold at that figure instead of the $20.67 figure set by law. In other words, the gold standard will be restored, but on a lower level
